Phyllis-

No one in Sign Enforcement has "pulled" this application for review. My understanding is that significant flaws in the application resulted in examiner objections, which required several meetings to resolve. Among those flaws was a substantial projection of the sign structure and catwalk over the adjoining lot and the existence of illumination. These elements are clearly contrary to the Technical Affairs approval.

In checking with the examiner about the sign just a moment ago, it seems illumination has been removed from the application and it will now be painted to eliminate the illegal projection. We will speak further with the examiner to try to move this forward for you.

Thank you.

Ed:
I think this is the second time since the March 25, 2013 Technical Affairs approval that you guys have pulled this application for review. The delays are simply intolerable and are going to kill this company.
If you must review this again, please expedite it.

Phyllis

Roseanne reviewed everything and it looks alright to her but she said she wants to take it upstairs and run it by the lawyers to be on the safe side. She took the folder and said if there aren't any objections by the lawyers we should see it approved most likely by next Tuesday and then we can pick it up from the record room.
